Single-stranded DNA (ssDNA) is required for T7 RNA polymerase (RNAP) to execute efficient DNA replication. However, T7 RNAP lacks the well-conserved aspartic acid residues in the fingers subdomain, and it lacks a secondary element, the so-called initiation element, in the trigger loop. A mutant T7 RNAP that still possesses the aspartic acid residues and the initiation element was constructed and studied. The results revealed that the aspartic acid residues in the fingers subdomain and the initiation element are important for efficient T7 RNAP-directed DNA synthesis. Both the activity of T7 RNAP with a mutant initiation element and the level of initiation element mRNAs were shown to be significantly lower than those with the wild-type initiation element.Q: in the html, what is 'block' and when do you use it?
