To our knowledge, research on the implication of physician active status for the motivation to report clinical practice variation is lacking. If we know that the physicians are more likely to report non-compliant behaviors among non-actives than among actives, then during the meetings of the QI team, when the physician join the team as an active or non-active member, the active physicians are more likely to report non-compliant behaviors. 3\). The coefficient of the interaction between the two variables was significant and positive, indicating that the non-active physicians are more likely to report non-compliant behaviors. The interpretation of the coefficient and its significant finding should be more cautious. 4\). In practice, people often report non-compliant behaviors that are different from what they really reported. Therefore, it is reasonable to test the effect of non-report on the actual non-compliant behavior (i.e. "non-report/non-compliant behavior" in Table 5{ref-type="table"}). The results showed that the coefficient of the interaction was non-significant after such correction, thus implying that the interaction was not biased by the bias of non-report, and the post-hoc tests based on the corrected coefficient further supported the findings of the study. 5\). We believe that people are more likely to report a non-compliant behavior when they are active than when they are non-actives, thus the interaction term "active status/non-report" has a negative value in the regression analysis. This implies that, in our study, the coefficient of the coefficient of interaction term is significant only because the interaction term is interpreted as a

Players: WMS Corporation of suppressive mammary tumors for purposes of in utero transplantation. The murine model of mammary carcinogenesis has been used to examine a variety of issues, including some regarding in utero transplantation. One interesting aspect of the transplantation of mammary tissue, and other cells, into mammary glands of previously-transplanted animals (paired transplantation) has been the maintenance of a suppressed tumor phenotype in the mammary tissue transplanted into a breast of a host animal that does not normally produce tumors. A review is given of aspects of mammary carcinogenesis, the murine model for mammary cancer, and transplantation models for this type of cancer. Details are given of the tumor suppressor mechanisms that may underlie the maintenance of suppressed tumors in transplanted breast tissue, and the concept of suppressing tumors using transplanted tissue is explored with respect to human breast cancer. Associative-sensitive graded persistent odor coding in the leopard gecko. The ability to discriminate odors with overlapping sensory features depends on odor intensity coding and is continuously improved by associative learning mechanisms. Here, we test whether the leopard gecko (Eublepharis macularius) can process odor similarities in a graded manner and, if so, whether its brain processes this in parallel with intensity coding. We show that geckos can learn to associate test and standard odors after a single conditioning trial, by demonstrating that the reward magnitude of test odors is comparable to that of trained odors. We further show that the leopard gecko's ability to detect changes in odor concentration is associated with changes in sensory features, that is, odor similarity, and that this ability depends on species-specific rapid olfactory learning mechanisms. Together, our results reveal that the leopard gecko has the computational capability of associative-sensitive graded odor coding. GHS School is a preschool located in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. It is one of two independent, non-sectarian daycare centers located in Broward County, Florida. Mission statement "GHS School embraces an educational philosophy of openness and respect through the development of each child through the environment that we create in each child's individual learning environment." History GHS School was founded in 1975 by Ms. Mary Beth Brogan (now Mary Beth Dean). In 1981, Ms. Brogan brought her philosophy of education to the nascent Fort Lauderdale Diocese of the Roman Catholic Church. Using her deep Catholic faith, plus her gifts in nurturing, leadership and openness to new ideas, she formed GHS School which accepts children from any religious or political affiliation. GHS School continues to be a place where families can learn, grow, and share community. Past principals Mr. James Pato, Jr. 1975 - current Ms. Mary Beth Dean 1975 - present
